Economic Summit

The effects of the great recession of 2008 are still being felt in Cornwall as they are across Connecticut. These include loss of jobs, closed businesses, and an out migration of young families to more economically vibrant areas. The town has appointed an Economic Development Commission (EDC) to help promote local businesses which are vital to the community.

The EDC redoubled its efforts by hosting the Cornwall Economic Development Summit over three days during the first week in February. The firm of Goman + York of East Hartford led residents through brainstorming exercises to identify community priorities and focus energies. G+Y is employed by the Northwest Hills Council of Governments and is charged with the task of revitalizing the economies of eight neighboring towns. Cornwall is the first area town to hold a summit. During the weekend meetings, residents were asked to identify areas of challenges and opportunities. After the public input sessions, the groups voted on their top priorities. Twenty-eight different issues were narrowed to seven to be further discussed at the concluding session. The priorities were in order of votes received: home-based business/agricultural business/telecommuting; West Cornwall water/septic; affordable/attainable housing; assist/promote existing businesses; parking; attracting new businesses, and branding of Cornwall/visitor centers.

The concluding meeting examined ways to implement the priorities. Michael Goman again led the group to identify concerns, resources needed, and task assignments for each issue. For example, erratic phone/Internet service is a major obstacle to the expansion of home-based businesses. A brochure listing businesses would also help their promotion. Applicable resources would include soliciting state support for telecommuting and marketing funds. Tasked to implement the telecommuting piece by working with Northwest Connect, a group seeking to increase phone and internet accessibility in the area, were the EDC, Goman + York, and the Board of Selectmen. The same groups will publish an updated business listing for Cornwall.

The discussions were informative and respectful of varying views. A suggestion was made to embrace and support our naturally occurring retirement community (NORC, for short).

Others questioned how that vision would be sustainable and how Cornwall would function without young families/people. All the meetings were videotaped and can be added to your cabin fever remedies at cornwallct.org.

This is an ongoing process. Goman + York will present its findings to the Planning and Zoning Commission soon. A summary report will be posted on the Cornwall website. Follow-up public meetings, hosted and publicized by the EDC, will be held quarterly to assure continued progress on meeting the summit's objectives. —Jayne Ridgway

Sap's Running! Grab a Bucket!

Sugar season is short, tough, but well worth the effort. Cornwall "sugarers" have found a way to produce the gooey, sweet, delicious amber gold for over a hundred years.

Whoever thought to take the slightly sweet sap that leaked out of maple trees in early spring and "cook" it into the delicious brew we put on our pancakes?

Early Native American tribes knew about the sap that rose in the maple trees, and they drank it as a spring tonic. It's full of minerals and sweet to the taste, even in its "water" state right out of the tree. There are some written references to maple sugaring that date back to 1557, but the exact origins are unknown. The technique of cooking the sap for a long time until the color changes and it becomes syrup may have come from French traders and missionaries. In the 1700s to early 1800s, the sap was often boiled down into sugar—a solid maple block that had a long shelf life. Maple sugar was also produced by Quakers and abolitionists as an alternative to cane sugar made by slaves in the West Indies. Thomas Jefferson started a maple plantation at Monticello in 1791.

A few Cornwall sugar producers I spoke with were Phil Hart, Gordon Ridgway, and Bill Hurlburt. The Harts' syrup graces the church pancake breakfast every year. Phil Hart complimented his helpers, Keaton Terrall, Ian and Dan Tyson, Lucas Calhoun, Jaime Murphy, and Eliza Tyson. "I couldn't do it without them, and I think we're raising a new generation of syrup farmers." Hart syrup has been produced at the farm for over 100 years. They use a simple hydrometer reading to test the density of the sap, or to see how much sugar has developed, and then the syrup is bottled. "Maple syrup is self preserving, but it can spoil if it's not cooked enough. The old timers could tell by the color and 'thickness' of the syrup when it was time to bottle, but we're a little more scientific."

Gordon Ridgway has been making maple syrup since he was a teenager. "Presidents' Day is when tapping usually begins around here. If you tap too early, the tree tends to heal over and you have to retap. Ironically, the worse the weather is, the better the sugaring season is. You need cold nights and warmish days to get the best sap runs."

When you take into account that it takes about 40 gallons of sap to produce one gallon of syrup, you can see how enormous the task is to produce a finished bottle of syrup.

Cornwall's syrup has been all over the world. Lydia Wolf was working for Amnesty International one year and took syrup with her as a gift. Even though language was a problem, she gave a sip to everyone around her and they loved it. One likes to think that syrup (and Lydia) helped to defeat communism in Eastern Europe.

Jill Sheffield took some syrup with her to Indonesia and gave it to the prime minister. It's been eaten on the side of a mountain in the Himalayas, and this writer remembers when some African students at the Institute of World Affairs in Taconic took some back home with them.

Bill Hurlburt employs a reverse osmosis machine to extract about half the water out of the sap before it's cooked. "I think it uses less energy in the long run," said Bill. He uses plastic tree taps, or quills, which he replaces every year. The quills act like a Band-Aid on a cut, and then the drill holes heal quickly when the quill is removed. It may help cut down on any bacteria or residue in the tap as the sap is collected.

Sugaring will be interesting this year.

The weather has been odd, to say the least. If we get more cold that sustains itself every night and warm days that go over 40 degrees, it will be a good run. Only the sugar gods know for sure.

Frozen

Pond hockey, or shinny as it's known north of the border, has a long tradition in Cornwall, and many here fondly recall winter days spent passing the puck with hometown hotshots such as Hunty and Shep Earhart, Marc Simont, John Horan, and, for one memorable season, Michael J. Fox.

While last year's abundant snowfall kept most of the ice covered, and this season initially looked like the winter that wasn't, a prolonged freeze finally arrived in early January delivering to Cream Hill Lake some of the best (and only) ice in Litchfield County. Why ice forms here before almost any other lake in the region is a bit of a mystery. Scientifically speaking, air temperature, wind, cloud cover, nucleation (the process by which tiny particulates cause super-cooled water to form ice crystals), and lake morphology are all factors.

Ensuring the ice is ready for skating requires physical testing: usually thudding a two-by-four vertically onto the surface and gauging the reaction. If solid, the next step is to venture forth with a set of Swedish ice claws (for self extraction) and a buddy standing close to shore with ropes and a ladder (very important).

On January 9, the ice was officially "in": two plus inches of black, glassy, and eerily transparent cover. With temps in the teens, the surface thickened by an inch and a half per day so that by the MLK weekend, it was strong enough to support legions of players making the pilgrimage from Waramaug and Wononscopomuc where the thermodynamics were not as favorable.

Anyone who's skated under open skies, felt the crack, flex, texture, and aliveness of natural ice, hopped over pressure ridges and flown as fast and far as the shoreline allows knows the experience has almost nothing in common with revolutions around a rink. Likewise, pond hockey is entirely distinct from the indoor version it spawned and which most people now know almost exclusively: an oval of artificial ice, metal halide lighting, boards, buzzers, slap shots, protective gear, checking, a Zamboni; the list goes on.

In the Cream Hill League, all that's needed is a frozen patch of pond, skates, and some sticks. Players—of any age, gender, or skill—are of the essence, and the fountain of future local legends. Campfires, marshmallows, and dogs (both four-legged and the frankfurter kind) are also common. One must, however, bring plenty of pucks since they have a habit of sliding under docks or into the water where the ice, warmed by the shoreline, sometimes melts at the margins. But that's a tiny price to pay for the pure joy of a pastime that links us to a simpler era when, as George Draper mused in the final stanza of Rink Keeper's Sestina:

Before these days of fury,/When indoor rinks were just a gleam in Hockey/Fanatics' eyes, there was no greater pleasure/Than winter mornings. Black ice. (Esposito/Knew days like this as a boy.) Some friends. No slapshots,/But a clear, cold sky. Choose teams. Drop the puck. Play hockey. —Henry Labalme

Maple Hill Fire

A glow at 2 A.M. in the west woke Gail and Richard Dolan on February 16. Further investigation proved their biggest fear—fire in the 100-plus-year-old horse barn. Instantly springing to action they flung open stall doors and shooed the eight large Belgian horses and a donkey to a safe pasture, but unfortunately the pigs could not be saved. Rapidly, first responders arrived and started hauling tack and supplies from the building. Members of the Cornwall Volunteer Fire Department dragged hose lines over the icy barnyard and a water supply was established. The large inferno began to yield.

The daunting task of coordinating fire suppression loomed with Chief Fred Scoville. Immediately Tanker Task Force 82 was dispatched (six tankers from neighboring towns) along with Canaan's aerial ladder. Protecting the adjacent hay barn was a priority and successful. The main barn was too fully involved to prevent a total loss. Chief Scoville is proud to have saved the hay barn "a mere 25 feet away" and to live in an area where our neighbors will come to help in the middle of the night. —The Editors

A New Crop of Volunteers

Just over a decade ago, the Cornwall Volunteer Fire Department became a real family affair. CVFD's junior division was started in 2005 by

First Selectman and fireman Gordon Ridgway, after considerable nagging from daughter Liz.

Over the years a number of juniors have graduated to full membership in the fire department. Zach Sawicki, now working full time as a supervising paramedic, has been the ambulance captain for several years. Will Russ, one of the original juniors, is now an emergency medical responder and firefighter. He was elected West Cornwall fire captain last summer and also serves on Canaan's fire department.

Fire department membership impacts family life, and the junior department offers a way to include young family members in its activities. For many of the young members age 21 or younger, that was just the beginning.

Liz Ridgway is now a certified EMT and is paid director of the St. Lawrence University EMS and an active member of the Cornwall Ambulance squad when she's home from college. She is pursuing nursing, and works in the Sharon Hospital emergency room as a medical technician.

Mary Kate Kosciusko literally grew up in the ambulance squad. "Some of my earliest memories," she said, "involve sitting in my father's pickup truck on the side of the road at the scene of an accident." Mary Kate took an emergency medical responder class with Liz Ridgway in Winsted at age 15 and later an EMT class at George Washington University. She is currently majoring in international affairs and plans to go to medical school after graduation.

Jonah Whiteside works full time as a paramedic for Danbury Hospital and part time for AMR in Waterbury. Jonah's father, Jim, was a member of the fire department from 1980 to 1995, then rejoined in 2006 at Jonah's urging. Jonah became an EMT at age 16, then joined the National Guard at age 17, where he was trained to be a combat medic. He completed his paramedic training while working full time. He was recently awarded "Lifesaver of the Year" by Waterbury Hospital.

UCONN student Brian Saccardi, son of member Steve Saccardi, just recently renewed his EMR certification and hopes to become more involved in the department between his school and work commitments.

The family tradition continues with two junior members, high schoolers Elsie Pryor and Rebecca Ridgway. Elsie just completed her EMT training last summer, and she, too, is looking forward to studying medicine. Her father, Joe Pryor, served on the ambulance squad for ten years, and Elsie said that his involvement in helping others inspired her to follow suit. Rebecca Ridgway is now a certified first responder and is starting to go on calls with her mother.

The CVFD can boast of two more college-age members. Sam Neubauer became an EMT during his freshman year at Bates College in Maine. He now works for Bates's EMS as a crew chief, and also serves on its board. Zach Busby trained to become an EMT his freshman year at Macalester College in Minnesota, and is on its EMS crew. Sam and Zach joined the CVFD last summer and respond to calls when they are home from school. Both said they joined because they want to help their Cornwall neighbors—and to get some experience in responding to calls that aren't largely for alcohol poisoning.

"I am impressed with the dedication and professionalism demonstrated by these young people in this area of their lives," said CVFD President Anne Kosciusko. "This is the reaping of what was sown a decade ago when the junior department was founded."

Keeping Family Treasures

It's not spring cleaning time yet, but now that we are indoors more than out, we come face to face with that to-do list and all the undone projects we keep meaning to do. A recent talk at the Cornwall Historical Society can help us keep our treasures intact and protect them from the deterioration of time.

Lizette Pelletier, State of Connecticut archivist, notes that our typical storage of old treasures like photographs, clippings, ancient birth certificates, and historical books often can damage and shorten the life of the contents. Those pictures and papers we have stuffed in a box in the attic can deteriorate due to water or mold damage, dust, temperature extremes, insects and rodents, the chemical composition of the materials themselves, or their storage containers. And we need to preserve even newer artifacts like electronic documents, digital images, and such.

So what should one consider when wanting to preserve Uncle Leo's congratulatory letter when our mother was born, grandma's postcard collection we inherited, or even our kids' art projects from Mrs. Wadhams's kindergarten class? Old inks may be acidic and color pigments in film and photographs may fade. So, if we are scrapbooking with an eye to keeping photos for posterity, we should be sure to use high-quality materials like acid- and lignin-free paper. Light can create irreversible and cumulative problems even when photocopying, so do not do it frequently. Glues used in albums and varnish on wood shelves can have harmful effects. Mold can damage items in 48 hours. In general, under cooler and dryer conditions, paper lasts longer.

Lizette recommends keeping these treasures together in normal living space. Fluctuations in temperature and humidity are a problem. Place important items on a shelf in a closet, away from the walls and floor. Store them in folders, boxes, and sleeves that are acid and lignin-free and avoid polyvinyl plastic. Store books, films,

INTERNSHIP AT CHS

Cornwall Historical Society has received a modest grant to fund a summer internship and is seeking applications for an eight-week part-time, paid internship. It is a two-day-a-week position and requires working on Sundays.

Excellent work ethic, ability to work independently, and strong interpersonal skills are required. Responsibilities will be varied and will include assisting with events and clerical and administrative work. Interest in history, experience with audio visual equipment, and a driver's license are pluses. Please send cover letter and resume if available to info@cornwallhistoricalsociety.org. The deadline is April 15.

CDs, and magnetic tapes upright. Oversized antique books should be placed in boxes with their spine down and fully supported but not overstuffed. Avoid rubber bands, paper clips, stickies, and bookmarks. Consider if these paper heirlooms need protection in a fire-proof safe or if they can be copied and stored electronically.

We often try to do repairs ourselves and it was recommended that we get training. The speaker offered some suggestions for finding a conservator and also provided suggestions of websites to consult: the Library of Congress, the National Archives, and the Northeast Document Conservation Center.

CCS Briefs

There is always something going on at Cornwall Consolidated School, from things as big as school and Park & Rec sports teams, all the way to the little things, like the power thought for the day that is announced over the loudspeaker every morning.

School team basketball has just ended and we are moving on to baseball and softball in the sports world. The coaches for the teams have not yet been chosen. Park & Rec basketball is still going on, so don't miss a chance to see a few of the teams' last games.

About half way into the month of March, the SMARTER Balanced Assessment Consortium (SBAC, for short) will be starting for third- to eighth-graders. Don't forget to remind them to study a bit when you see them around Cornwall.

The second trimester will also be ending around the middle of March, so stay tuned for news about the honor roll in the papers. Many eighth-graders are moving along very fast with their Explorations projects with the help of their mentors. They can't wait to see their final projects at the end of the year!

Some local events this month at CCS: On March 11 and 12 the annual musical will be held. This year it is Aladdin. March 16 is fourth-grade Arts Day at the Hotchkiss School and on March 24 and 25 there is no school because of teacher workshops and Good Friday. —Mason Weigold

Cornwall Briefs

•Upcoming Town Budget: We got a preview from the first selectman who predicted a slight rise of 2 percent, helped by an early mild winter and a major savings by mining sand from the town gravel pit rather than paying companies to truck it here. Credit road crew chief Jim Vanicky with the idea. Winter, however, got a little colder and snowier in mid-February and no one can predict what March weather will bring.

The budget plan includes a small expansion of hours for the new director of social services, a new tanker for the Cornwall Volunteer Fire Department to replace a 30-year-old vehicle, a new backhoe replacing a 15-year-old machine for the town crew, and fixing a short, but worn-out, bridge on Flat Rocks Road in Cornwall Bridge.

The Board of Education is scheduled to present its budget to the Board of Finance on March 9. Then there will be a hearing on the overall budget on April 22. And, finally, a town meeting with vote on May 20. —John Miller
